

Cats Are Not Small Dogs: A Deep-Dive Into Understanding Feline Specific Diagnostics

Cats are not small dogs. Nearly every sick cat that arrives at a veterinary hospital "just isn't right". They have "Subtle Signs of Illness" and are masters at hiding disease and pain. Diagnostics for this species are critical and in addition to an excellent history and physical examination, they are a requirement to discover why that feline patient isn't well. Let's look at what diagnostics are available and after more than 37 years of feline practice (YIKES!!!), what I have found helpful, practical and needed to help the feline patients that I have cared for over the years.

Presented by Dr. Elizabeth O'Brien

Dr. Elizabeth O'Brien is the managing veterinarian of two feline-only practices in Ontario, where she continues to work as a practitioner and a passionate advocate for cat welfare. She received her veterinary degree in 1985 from the Ontario Veterinary College and became a Diplomate, American Board of Veterinary Practitioners in feline practice, in 1999. She works with veterinary teams, shelters and industry partners to improve the understanding and medicalization of the cats in communities across Canada. She was the recipient of the prestigious CVMA Small Animal Practitioner of the Year Award for 2014.
